Jacqueline Joudo Larsen is a criminologist and Head of Research for the above organisation with a technical role on the survey program.

During a 15-year career in research, Jacqueline has focused on social justice and human rights issues, with a particular interest in unpacking the causes of crime, understanding vulnerability and resilience, and using that information to drive policy change.

Jacqui will provide an overview on modern slavery, with a focus on women and girls. Although modern slavery occurs in every corner of the globe and affects many regardless of race, gender, religion, and socio-economic status, females are disproportionately affected.

This is a topic everyone should be more informed about. Jacqui is well qualified to share her expertise on the subject. Don't miss this opportunity to learn more about modern slavery (happening right under our noses) with a focus on women and girls.
